

10 Myths about Teams

1. When you bring a group of people together to work on a project they are a team
2. Team members do not need to “Storm” to be successful
3. Highly performing teams will stay that way indefinitely
4. The shorter amount of time the team spends “Forming”, the faster they will get through “Storming”
5. Conflict amongst team members is avoidable
6. The only major disruptor to team efficiency is conflict
7. Recognizing team members individually is not necessary
8. Leaders for your team naturally evolve
9. Rumors of budget cuts do not affect team performance outcomes and behaviors
10. Team members follow each others lead, not the managers

Why are each of the beliefs listed above Myths:

Did You Know: Your beliefs about how to lead teams and team members are made known by the actions you take with them?

Building Leadership Skills- Leading Teams 2008/2009 - This material has been created by Andrew Sanderbeck for the Infopeople Project [infopeople.org], supported by the U.S. Institute of Museum and Library Services under the provisions of the Library Services and Technology Act, administered in California by the State Librarian. Any use of this material should credit the author and funding source.