The Changing Role of Libraries

Libraries are serving as community hubs
• Librarians often asked to assume role of facilitator
• Most are “learning by doing”

High level of interest in facilitation training
• Fall 2017 survey; 228 librarians in California responded
• Mix of experienced and beginners

Today is first of two webinars for more experienced facilitators
• Still developing plans for introductory level training
Lead Presenter

Susan Stuart Clark

Founder & Director of Common Knowledge Group (www.ckgroup.org)

- Trainer and consultant on community engagement initiatives; most projects involve libraries and/or local government
- Research Deputy with Kettering Foundation
- Board member National Coalition for Dialogue and Deliberation (nccd.org)
- Recently designed and conducted Libraries Lead the Way community engagement and facilitation skills program

Poll Questions

Question #1

Do you plan to apply these skills for:

a) internal conversations
b) external conversations
c) both?

Question #2

How would you rate your level of facilitation experience?

- 5 = very experienced
- 1 = complete beginner

---

Common situations for basic facilitation

- Lead a group discussion about a book or library program
- Facilitate a discussion with teens or children
- Lead a regular staff meeting
- Conduct an orientation or simple training
Using Multi-Dimensional Listening:
Facilitation that helps a group come to shared understanding about a situation

Facilitating Dialogue, not Debate

Debate
Two sides
Winners & losers
Listen to enhance position

Dialogue
Multiple perspectives
Exchange for mutual understanding
Listen to learn

Goal for Today

Help groups “listen together” to develop shared understanding:
• Where they agree
• Where they don’t

From “ME” to “WE”

Agenda: Facilitating Multi-Dimensional Listening

I Librarians and Listening: Starting points
II Defining Multi-Dimensional Listening
III Stories about Listening: Key Practices
IV Question and Answer

Librarians & Listening: Starting Points
Librarian Service versus Facilitation

Same
• Welcoming
• Open/neutral
• No value judgments
• Jointly making sense

Different
• Not just one-on-one
• Supporting a whole group
• Not being the expert
• May not have clear answers

A “conscious” listener is:
• Neutral and non-judgmental
• Curious and engaged throughout
• Listening to the whole person
• Using “friendly focus”
Role of the Facilitator

• When you are an instructor, the group is learning by listening to you
• When you are a facilitator, the group is learning by listening to each other

Common misperception: Facilitators “smooth things over”

• The root word “facile” is often translated as “make easy”
• Yet, your role is to help a group do its work, which may not be easy
• Effective facilitation puts people “at ease” when they are being asked to stretch their perspectives
Defining Multi-Dimensional Listening

Three “Channels” of Listening

• Listening to Yourself
• Listening One-on-One
• Listening Together as a Group
  • Making sense of the whole situation together

Key practice: Personal Preparation

• Know thyself!
• Choose a preparation approach that lets you be ready to stay present to what is happening.
Key practice: Help prepare the group to listen

- Establish commitment to dialogue (versus debate)
- Group guidelines that share responsibility for listening
- Icebreaker that sets up practice with conscious listening (e.g., a Think, Pair, Share)

Sample conversation guidelines

- Treat each other with respect
- Listen to learn
- Help make sure everyone has a chance to share
- Assume good intentions
- Your questions are valuable

Listening Stories: Key Practices
Common Situation #1

• In a staff planning meeting, the group came to some agreements. But in the follow up, it turns out that the consensus was more fragile than it seemed.

What happened?
Important issues of concern did not get surfaced.

Common Situation #2

• In a community meeting, people shared their points of view without discovering any points of agreement. They "were heard" but still left feeling demoralized.

What happened?
The conversation did not surface and identify connections or shared values.
Key Practice: Adjusting your focus

Scale in broad statements:
• “Can you give me an example or situation you’re thinking of?”

Expand overly specific ideas:
• “What about that idea is important to you?”

Napa Story #2
Key Practice: Letting others make their own meaning

- Letting different perspectives “sink in”
- Trusting the participants to connect dots

The “Arc” of a Conversation

Key Practice: Question “arc” for group listening

- Getting participation going: “Does anyone have a similar or different experience to what was just shared?”
- Mid-way – balancing: “Is there someone who has a different experience or perspective on what we’re discussing?”
Key practice: Question “arc” for group listening

• Beginning to listen for common ground: “What connections are you hearing between what’s being said?”
• Testing for common ground: “What are we hearing that you seem to agree on? What needs more discussion?”
