LibraryFarm

Posted by pete on February 26, 2013

The LibraryFarm is an organic community garden on one-half acre of land owned by the Northern Onondaga Public Library in Cicero, NY. Anyone can "check out" a plot! The purpose of the LibraryFarm is to provide a place for the community to grow, share and learn about food literacy, and organic, sustainable gardening.

At the LibraryFarm, half of the area is dedicated to the Community Garden; the other half is dedicated to the LibraryFarm Plotters - our individual gardeners. All gardeners agree to follow organic growing practices.

Come visit us! We are located at the NOPL @ Cicero Library.

A photograph of a modern library interior. The space features several large, curved, light-colored wooden tables arranged in a circular pattern. People are seated at these tables, some reading and others working. The room has a high ceiling with exposed concrete walls and a wooden floor. In the background, there are bookshelves, a clock, and a ladder. The overall atmosphere is bright and open.

A woman with short blonde hair, wearing a bright pink sleeveless dress with a floral pattern, is speaking into a professional video camera mounted on a tripod. She has a grey fanny pack slung over her shoulder. In the background, a large sign on a wall reads "Love your library" in red cursive. To the left, the back of a person's head and shoulder are visible, looking towards the woman. The scene is set in a room with white walls and a white draped structure on the left.

A person wearing a red t-shirt and blue jeans is captured in motion, hula hooping with a large, multi-colored hoop. The background is a light-colored, textured floor. The image has a motion blur effect, emphasizing the circular movement of the hoop. The title "Trends vs. Fads" is overlaid in large white text.
